Robert Louis Stevenson’s three and a half month Monterey stay in 1879 left a lifelong imprint on the Scottish author. In a series of later essays, “The Old Pacific Capital,” his pen captured local scenes in delightful passages: the protective, wooded hills overlooking Monterey Bay, the venerable Mission Carmel and its nearby flowing Carmel River, the sea breezes, the fog, and life along the streets of Monterey. And then there was Carmel Valley, where a life-changing event left him nearly dead while out on a camping trip.

He arrived in Monterey on August 30, 1879, having traveled from Scotland to claim his life’s love, Fanny Osbourne, a married woman he had met while in France three years earlier. She was now separated from her husband. Learning of her stay in Monterey with her two children, Lloyd and Isobel, Stevenson made the arduous Atlantic voyage and then traveled second class by train to join her.

When he arrived in Monterey, sick from a recurring lung ailment sometimes referred to as “galloping consumption,” Stevenson encountered yet another obstacle: not only was Fanny still married, but she and Stevenson had some sort of misunderstanding. He decided to leave town for a time. He rented a wagon and horses and set out for Carmel Valley, where he planned to recuperate in the warmer climate.

His getaway choice may have been influenced by a Carmel Valley camping trip of Fanny’s, taken earlier that year. Bradley Sargent, owner of Rancho el Potrero de San Carlos and Rancho San Francisquito, had invited Fanny, her extended family, and friends to attend a seasonal cattle round-up. She later published an account of the event, “An Old Spanish Rodeo on a Cattle Rancho in Carmel Valley,” in Lippincott’s Magazine of Popular Literature.

Her narrative described a wagon trip from Monterey into Carmel Valley, then a steep climb up a rugged road rising into the hills to an old corral. (See Stevenson, page 3)

The Jamesburg Earth Station - Cachagua
By Reggie Jones

From 1969 to 1990 the Jamesburg Earth Station (JES), a satellite communication system in Cachagua, east of the Carmel Valley Village, played a key role in NASA’s Apollo Moon landing program as well as a significant role in worldwide communications. Besides relaying information for ten Apollo missions including man’s first landing on the moon, JES was the link that allowed coverage of the 1972 Winter Olympics in Japan, Nixon’s visit to China in 1972, Elvis’ “Aloha” concert from Hawaii in 1973, Vietnam coverage and the Tiananmen Square “Tank Man” episode.

JES, with a 97 ft. antenna dish, was built in 1968 by the Comsat Corporation to support Intelsat’s first internationally owned worldwide satellite communication system. The Intelsat network included geostationary satellites over the Pacific, Atlantic and Indian Oceans connecting with as many as 300 earth stations. JES, located near the Pacific coast radio-interference-free Carmel Valley, communicated directly with satellites over the Pacific Ocean and via microwave network and landlines to places within the USA. Construction completion was timed so that JES could support the NASA Apollo Moon Landing program from December 1968 onwards. Among the most significant and spectacular transmissions was man’s first step. (See JES, page 3)
Our biggest fundraiser of the year is coming up on August 22—The Party in the Village! Here we have two village non-profits cooperating in the effort to raise funds for the organizations. How did this happen? Carmel Valley Village Improvement Committee (CVVIC) had put on The Village Affair for 20 years (1990-2009) while CVHS raised funds through its Carmel Valley Cowboy Shows for 15 years (1993-2007). About five years ago, after weathering the recession, the leadership of these two groups decided that instead of competing for funds they would both do better cooperating. The result: Party in the Village! with dance-able, easy-to-listen-to, even sing-along-able country music. This year’s program includes Los Vaqueros Hunting Club Traveling Band opening for The California Cowboys with special guest Bobby Black.

Members from the boards of both nonprofits form the steering committee for Party in the Village! Once the date is set and the event organized, volunteers begin canvassing the area for donations for the silent auction. Sponsorships, that is, cash donations are also accepted. Tickets are on sale now at www.partyinthevillage.org and will be available in July at the outlets listed in the flyer below.

On the day of the event, there is opportunity for everyone to get involved and help raise money for CVVIC and CVHS. See the following article about how YOU can help.

THE CARMEL VALLEY HISTORIAN

(JES, from page 1) on the moon in July 1969. The whole world was able to see and hear Neil Armstrong’s “This is one small step for a man, a giant leap for mankind” as he stepped onto the moon’s surface, solely because of JES.

On May 25, 1961, President Kennedy and Congress committed the USA to “landing a man on the moon and returning him safely to Earth” before the end of the decade. This was at a time when the United States was trailing Russia in all aspects of manned space-travel and lunar exploration. The race to put a man on the moon was won by the U.S. All stages of the race were globally riveting events and were brought to the world by JES. From Apollo 8 through 17 (December 1, 1968, to December 19, 1972) all Pacific Ocean recoveries and all lunar landings were supported by JES.

A transmission that was also of great significance was former President Nixon’s historic visit to the People’s Republic of China in 1972. This was a very important step in normalizing relations between the two countries, and marked the first visit of a U.S. President to PRC, ultimately ending 25 years of separation. As a result of Nixon’s visit to China, another historic event occurred, though not televised. Sent by the first Prime Minister of China, a Chinese delegation for cultural/scientific exchange visited JES, right here in Carmel Valley.

Since 1988 the facility has gone through several ownership changes. In 2012 JES was put back on the market. Currently it is being leased by the Stanford Research Institute, Menlo Park, which is working with the U.S. government regarding possible future use of the facility.

You can access a complete history of the Earth Station, its construction details and important transmissions on our website: www.carmelvalleyhistoricalsociety.org.

(Stevenson, from page 1) The visitors spent several days enjoying the shouts of the vaqueros, the lowing of gathered cattle, the branding of calves, post-dinner songs around the campfire and a wild chase from an enraged bull.

On his solitary trip, begun on September 9, 1879, Stevenson left Monterey and got as far as the Berwick Ranch (near today’s Mid-Valley Shopping Center) where he had dinner and went to sleep on the hay in the barn. The next day, before starting up the steep, twisting Robinson Canyon Road, he switched horses with Mr. Berwick. By evening he reached San Clemente Creek, located on Bradley Sargent’s rancho. Ill and cold, the author collapsed.

According to his own account, he lay under a tree for two days in a sort of stupor, only rising long enough to fetch creek water for himself and the horse, and to build a fire to make coffee. At night, he was kept awake by the frogs and the ringing of goat bells from the nearby ranch owned by Jonathan Wright and his partner, Anson Smith.

It was Wright, or in some accounts, the Wright children, who found the ailing author.

Stevenson spent three weeks recuperating at the cabin, writing to his lawyer friend, Charles Baxter, on September 24, 1879, “I am lying in an upper chamber nearly naked, with flies crawling all over me, and a clinking of goat bells in my ear, which proves to me that the goats are come home and it will be time to eat.”

Not one to lie about his experience. As a result of his stay in Carmel Valley, Stevenson’s description no longer stands.

Finally recovered, Stevenson returned to Monterey. He penned a letter on October 8, 1879 to his friend, the English poet and author, Edmund Gosse, about his Carmel Valley experience. “It was an odd, miserable piece of my life; and according to all rule, should have been my death; but after awhile my spirit got up again in a divine frenzy, and has since kicked and spurred my vile body forward with great emphasis and success.”

Soon after, Fanny departed Monterey for Oakland to settle legal matters with her husband. Stevenson left Monterey for San Francisco on December 16, 1879 to wait for her divorce. The couple was married on May 19, 1880.

His Carmel Valley stay was brief and plagued by illness, but Stevenson’s greatest works still lay ahead. Besides numerous essays, books and poems, two novels in particular, “Treasure Island” (1883) and “The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde” (1886) continue to rank among great works of literature for today’s readers.

Robles del Rio Store—Later Known as Rosie’s Cracker Barrel

The historic Robles del Rio Store pictured on this early 1940’s postcard was well known as Rosie’s Cracker Barrel for many decades. The Robles del Rio Store and Post Office, and the Standard gas station were everyday stops for local residents. There was also a bar and eatery in the back of the store. The gas station and store have been restored and can be seen just past the river on Esquiline. (A complete history “Rosie and His Cracker Barrel” is available at the History Center.)

This particular postcard was mailed in June 1943 by Mrs. Mildred (Harrington) Augustitus to her father Walter Harrington who was then a resident of the Napa Valley Veterans Home. At the time Mildred taught grades 1-4 at the Corral de Tierra Elementary School. The Historical Society wishes to thank Tom Augustitus for supplying a copy of his mother’s post card along with additional information.

The Historical society is collecting information and artifacts related to the Robles del Rio Subdivision and Rosie’s Cracker Barrel for a future exhibit. If you have related documents, artifacts or information, please contact the History Center.
